Posted by: Robert Jacobi in Web Development , Joomla , CMS Expo on Mar 30, 2010

Welcome to our 2010 kick-off newsletter and blog. We will keep you informed on events going on in IT, content management, open source solutions, customer service news plus other creative ideas involving business and technology.

The world today is divided into open source solutions and proprietary systems. Several of the major benefits of open source include lower initial costs (helping your IT grow with you as you need), flexibility (no rules to what you have to do and when), scalability (growing with functionality and usage according to your rules not someone else's), and control (you are not tied to one person or provider for support). The moral of the story is that open source works with you.

Yesterday we installed a trial version of JomSocial, and today made it available to a select group of testers (n=25), as the basis for a "Evanston Business & Technology Community."

Initial observations:
